

Dr. Shasha Wang is the Head of Chinese and the lecture in Chinese Studies in the School of Linguistics, Languages and Literature, Bangor University. Her expertise lies in the field of Chinese language teaching and also cross-culture disciplinary studies between Chinese and Translation Studies. Shasha is teaching and supervising Undergraduate and Postgraduate (MA taught students and M.Phil./PhD students doing Chinese Studies and Translation Studies) students.

Shasha has over 20 years of teaching experience in Chinese language and culturally-related modules. She is experienced lecturer and currently teach all content modules related with Chinese Studies, such as Introduction to Chinese Studies; Contemporary Chinese Studies; History in Context; Culture in Context, etc. Shasha's publication varies from journal articles to translated books, such as The Cambridge History of American Literature; How to aid Chinese Students in English writing; A Word on Development of American Women Liberation. With her PhD gained in the area of Chinese Studies in Durham University, Shasha's research interests focus on Chinese Studies which includes Western representations of China from history to present; China's self-imaging and images of China in the West; Media and cultural representation of China; Mutual perceptions between the West and China; Mass media and socio-political changes in China; Discourse Analysis and Critical Discourse Analysis.