Explaining the Confucius Institute

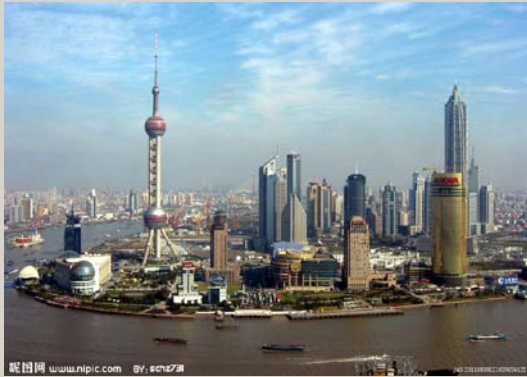

Confucius (551 BC – 479BC)

The Confucius Institute is a non-profit institute, which aims at promoting the spread of Chinese language and culture and encouraging cultural exchanges. It is generally based at educational institutions such as foreign universities and research institutions. The Confucius Institute at Bangor is jointly funded and was set up by Bangor University and China University of Political Science and Law (CUPL)

The most important job of the Confucius Institute is to provide Chinese learners all over the world with standardized and authoritative Chinese learning materials, as well providing important channels for Chinese teaching and learning.

A thinker, politician and educator of the late Spring and Autumn Period, was the founder of the school of Confucianism. 400 years ago, an Italian missionary translated "The Analects of Confucius" into Latin, which keeps record of Confucius' words and deeds. Then he brought the book to Europe, which commenced the spreading of Confucius doctrine to the west.
